FRED HURLEY changes bills with the Yip Yip Yank girls today, and the dope indicates there is plenty doing. It is a burlesque military bit in which we see General Hoken's camp visited by a group of pretty Red Cross nurses who are determined to drive dull care away. Just how they do it is the cause of many a good laugh. The bill is probably noted for the clever work of Fred Maley, black face artist who features this as his star bill of the week. He takes the part of the black courier, and makes things bright and happy all the while. The song numbers are all patriotic in character, plenty of pep in action all the way through. The chorus is given excellent opportunity, and if the weather man will kindly be good tonight there ought to be a big night tonight.

Harold Lockwood Stars.

"Pals First," showing at the Princess, is a story of brother love revolving around two pals, Danny Rowland and Dominic Blair, respectively. By Mr. Lockwood and James Lackey, Graduates of Yale, Harvard, Sing Sing and San Quentin, criminal outcasts of society, the two pals wander to Winnie Hall, somewhere in sunny Tennessee where to their amazement, they are joyfully admitted by Uncle Tex, an old dorky servant who thinks he recognizes in Danny his long absent master. Dick Castleman, whose death at sea has been reported. Taking advantage of a situation which promises to insure at least temporary comfort the pals agree to continue the deception.

As the real Dick, Danny wins the love of Jean Logan in suite of the efforts of Mr. Harry Chilton, a rival for the girl's hand, and the date for the wedding is set when Dominic steps in and begs Danny to give up his plan of deceit. When Danny refuses, Dominic, to protect the girl, denounces his pal as a thief, a forger, a pickpocket and an ex-convict.

Danny realizes that his moment has arrived and in a tense scene proves that he is not Danny Rowland but the real Dick Castleman, who assumed the identity of a criminal in order to bring back the lost soul of lovable old Dominic.

With thousands of men and women appearing in the photoplay, "Love's Conquest," in support of Lina Cavallieri, the celebrated diva, this is said to be one of the largest picture productions ever made in this country. The picture, which will be shown at the Nelson today is, in every respect, a remarkable production. Mme. Cavallieri portrays a role of great power—that of Glismonda, an Athenian duchess, a beautiful widow, who is wooed in vain by many noblemen, who seek to possess themselves of both her riches and a jewels. The portrayal of this role Mme. Cavallieri wears her famous jewels, which long have been a source of amazement and delight to operatic devotees.

Glismonda, has a four year old son, whom she loves with passionate devotion, and when Prince Zaccaria, a relative, seeks her hand in marriage, she spurns his offer. Jealous of the child, the Prince orders one of his lieutenants to thrust the infant into an amphitheatre where a magnificent lion he had presented to Glismonda is confined. When Glismonda hears of this so-called "accident," she publicly announces, as she stands within the shadow of the cross, that she will wed the man who rescues her child from death.

Almerio, a common huntsman, enters the amphitheatre, beats off the lion and brings the child safely to his mother's arms. When he claims the fulfillment of her vow she is of pebbles birth and unworthy of her. She persists in her refusal despite the opposition of the populace, and it is only when Almerio brings her the head of the bandit who has been ravishing her province, that the well-springs of her love for the man gush forth and prompt her later to espouse him publicly.

In the development of this tremendous one Sardon story there are scenes of unusual thrill and most convincing heart appeal.

Says New York Has
Large Fuel Shortage

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—Mayor Hylan's bin-to-bin coal survey conducted by the police despite a request from Federal Fuel Administrator Garfield to desist, shows greater New York to be 3,577,261 tons short of a "normal" coal supply, according to figures made public last night.

In notifying Dr. Garfield that the survey would be continued, Mayor Hylan intimates that persons found to have hoarded coal might be compelled to surrender part of it to less fortunate citizens in case a shortage of fuel developed. It was not announced last night whether the survey had revealed any hoarders.
